THE CAGE

for Sarah
through the arcades, indestructible longing casts its dangerous and lovely shadow on the heart

... the cage stands as before ... unfinished and already decayed as if its construction had been abruptly and inexplicably arrested ...

... its builders overtaken in their endeavour by some event which for all their skill they had never for an instant anticipated

... an eruption so sudden and so violent that it reduced to rubble the elaborate structure (of which the cage was merely one feature) one facet of a complex network of forms arranged according to some logic separate and alien to the surrounding desolation ...

a labyrinth of distorted signs stretching out across the plain ...

a wild attempt to contain the inevitable flood of mute destruction

... a string of bloodied rags and broken nails obliterating everything

... but this barren cube ... significant only because it remains ...

an empty analogy ... a vacuous, stale and airless bag of words ...
